Re: Cook v. General Electric Co.
and Brush Wellman Inc.

Dear Robin:

It has been nearly two years since Brush, pursuant to Contract No. AT(30-1)-541, notified the United States government that Mrs. Cook had filed an action against General Electric and Brush Wellman Inc., claiming that her husband, Glenwood Cook, had died due to exposure to beryllium while working on the ANP project at General Electric in Cincinnati, Ohio. As set forth in numerous pleadings and in prior correspondence, the beryllium that was supplied to the General Electric facility was beryllium owned by the United States Government and supplied under contract between Brush and the Atomic Energy Commission to GE. That contract provided for the defense and indemnification of Brush by the United States Government.

Since Brush's initial notification, we have provided the government copies of contracts including all modifications, pleadings and other information and records. We kept the government fully apprised of the status of the case. Through our efforts, we were able to get Brush dismissed in July, 1986 from this case. Brush then submitted the fees, costs and expenses of defending the action to the government.
